The Challenges Facing Europe Perspectives from the Harvard Center for European Studies

Trans-Atlantic trade and investment opportunities are bound to be affected by evolving trends in Europe including the strengthening of the Euro, political relationships with the U.S., and relocation of business to Eastern Europe among others. The Europe-U.S. link is particularly important, as Europe is the largest investor in the U.S. and its largest overseas market, while the U.S. is the largest investor in Europe and its largest overseas market.

Three members of the Harvard Center for European Studies will share their view of the present situation and the future of the European economy, the impact of the enlargement and the political challenges facing Europe. Please join us and listen to these experts and learn what the impact of these changes may mean for your business and industry.

Panelists:

Peter Hall,

Krupp Foundation Professor of European Studies at Harvard University,
Director of the Harvard Center for European Studies

Grzegorz Ekiert

Professor of Government at Harvard University

Daniel Ziblatt

Assistant Professor of Government at Harvard University
