China and India economies are growing exceptionally fast and their products and services are expanding in European and American markets. Their businesses are challenging the dominance of the West and many fear their impact on employment in developed countries.

At the same time, they are pursuing very different development models: China enjoys $60 billion a year of foreign investments and excels in manufacturing while India specializes in many services.

Come and discuss with executives experienced in both countries to appreciate the opportunities, reflect on the tasks ahead to compete in a new world and continue to provide full employment at home.
